I'm a huge fan of Burmese food. It's a mix of Thai and Vietnamese. The flavors are bright, vibrant and light. No heavy sauces.

Oooh, hard question off the get go! If I'm feeling exotic, I love Thai and Indian food. I like the mix of flavors that are different from the normal hum-drum. And they both hide veggies in the meal which is a plus for me!

Q 2 . Comfort

Do you have any comfort foods? What are they? Do they have any good stories behind them?

Ohhhhhh...my list of comfort foods are endless. Often depends on the time of year. In the summer, I'll go for ice cream. In the winter, I'll reach for Mac & Cheese. Maybe it's the creamy texture since I like pudding too. Takes me back to my childhood when times were simpler.

Baked mac n' cheese caserole.... potatoes..... garlic bread.... pasta with butter and parmesan cheese..... more potatoes..... Okay so basically carbs and bread, haha. I was an still am a super picky eater, so the pasta and butter was always just a go-to for my family to get me to eat dinner. But I have incredibly fond memories of making mac n' cheese with my dad. I'd make the pasta and then he'd cut up the cheese and we'd always work together to do the casserole part of it. Makes me smile when I eat it now.

Q 3 . Dislikes

Any foods you DON'T like?

I'm all about sweet and savory. Not a huge fan of bitter melon. I know it's healthy and has many nutritional benefits but bitter melon is a NO-GO in my book.

Everything that's not a carb? I got cursed with the strong bitter taste, so I have a hard time "tasting" most veggies beyond just "bitter". For the same reason, I'm not a fan of chocolate. Fruits are hit and miss based on textures. I don't eat fish, or anything that has had more interaction with water than drinking it. I'm not a fan of the "umami" flavor group either. And despite being raised in Utah, "fry sauce" is not food :P
